

REGULATIONS,
FOR THE
Jefferson Fire Society,
IN CHARLESTOWN,

Instituted January, 1867.

PREAMBLE.

WE, the subscribers, feeling sensible of the obligation we are under to each other for the security of our lives and property, and conceiving ourselves at all times exposed to the distressing calamities of fire, have agreed to unite ourselves into a Society, for the purpose of better securing to each other the productions of our industry and enterprise: we therefore agree to distinguish ourselves by the name of The Jefferson Fire Society; and whenever the devouring element may call us into action, let us endeavor, by every exertion in our power, to rescue the lives and property of ourselves and fellow citizens from its devouring influence.

If any incitement be necessary to animate us to the discharge of our duty to each other, and to the world, let us but call to mind the distressing circumstances of our ancestors, at the time they beheld their habitations in flames, and themselves fleeing from the awful scene, to seek a shelter for their wives and children among strangers. May we keep in view the precious memory of those sages, who toiled and bled in freedom's cause; and strive to prove ourselves not unworthy of the prize, which they so dearly purchased; and endeavor, so far as circumstances may admit, to follow their example in alleviating the distresses of humanity, by the works of charity and benevolence, while acting as faithful disciples of those, who so magnanimously taught us the instructive lesson of republican virtue.
